manual:

Summary of proposed changes (Include more detail on page 2 or other attachment)...

Sections 5.1 and 5.2 exclude from the calculation of the baseline all days on which a DADRP bid has been selected by SCUC. They further limit the number of days that NYISO can look back to 30. This allows a situation where a resource may be selected as economic on each of the last 30 days (a very good outcome for all concerned) whereupon its baseline becomes undefined, as there are no longer any "eligible" days to include in the baseline calculation. It is not clear what value the NYISO would employ in such instances.

In such situations an acceptable alternative baseline needs to be employed. The Price Responsive Load Working Group should be asked to develop such an alternative on an expedited basis. One example of such an alternative could be that the last valid baseline value would remain in place until a new eligible day became available. In the meantime, the NYISO should clarify what would happen under the current wording.
